

THE PROSPECT OF WHITBY

Perched on the banks of the Thames in historic Wapping, The Prospect of Whitby is one of London's most storied riverside pubs - widely regarded as the city's oldest of its kind. Tradition traces its origins to 1520, when it was known as The Pelican, later earning the nickname the Devil's Tavern for its more notorious reputation.

Shaped by centuries of river life, this stretch of Wapping was once a world of sailors, smugglers and pirates, where fortunes were made and quickly lost. The pub stood at the heart of it all, serving those who lived and worked by the tide.

Just beyond its walls lies the shadow of Execution Dock, where pirates and maritime criminals met their fate. A noose still hangs over the water today - a stark reminder of those darker days - while tales persist of Judge George Jeffreys, the infamous "Hanging Judge", said to have passed this way in an age of brutal justice.

Rebuilt in the 18th century and now Grade II listed, the pub retains its character, from its rare pewter-topped bar to its timeworn interiors. At low tide, Pelican Stairs reveal the foreshore below - now explored by mudlarks uncovering fragments of London's past.
